Skills to achieve the Successful Management
Jhonny Valverde Flores¹

The successful management is the heart of every successful staff and business. Great managers have a natural ability to make their staff feel welcome and appreciated. They understand that when employee morale is good, job satisfaction is also good. Employees are not only seen as there to make a profit for the company, they are viewed as possible potential managers themselves. Leaders aren’t born, they are made and as a manager, it is your job to make them.

This journal will strive to continue delivering high quality and geographically balanced research articles on major topics related to Management Sciences with two issue/year format. Both fundamental and applied aspects are equally represented by invited contributions from rising young scientists as well as more established ones from many different fields. Moreover the new science, knowledge, and applications being discovered and investigated, the public awareness, perception, and understanding of management sciences is also of tremendous importance for the implementation and commercial success of such revolutionary technology.

With the journal of Global Management Sciences we intend to pursue such an educational direction and sincerely believe the journal will contribute to a better understanding of an exciting new field of science and get large solutions to the society. Finally, all the authors, guest editors, referees, contributors, and readers are greatly acknowledged for their support and consideration for this journal.
